Genealogy of The Dare Family

Dare Motto:

Loyalty Without Spot

1519360

THIS book contains all the information I have been able to collect concerning William Dare and the descendants of his second son, Robert, of whom I am one.

I am very grateful for the aid given me by Miss Rebecca Dare, of Zanesville, Ohio, and Mr. Robert Moore, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

I regret that this record is so incomplete in the first generation, but so far as I know no genealogy of the Dare family has ever been published, and I hope my efforts will encourage some other member of the family to take up this work with better success.

CLARA DARE ETTINGER.

Chicago, Ill., February 20, 1901.

The different branches of the numerous Dares in New Jersey were classified as follows:

The Stow Creek,
The Maurice River,
The Woodbury,
The Cape May,
The Millville, and
The Deerfield.

This genealogy pertains especially to the Deerfield branch.

William Dare

William Dare came to this country in or prior to 1682. He left estates in Dorset and Somersetshire, England. His wife's name was Constant. They had six children.

He is described as of Cohansey, in the county of Salem. He probably came into this region with the Fairfield people. He located a tract of one hundred acres of cedar swamp on Lebanon as early as March, 1695-6. About 1700 he became the owner of two fifty-acre tracts, as set off by Bridges, composing a part of the farm northeast of Elmer's mill-pond, recently occupied by David Dare, one of his lineal descendants, who died April, 1863.

William Dare was sheriff of Salem County in 1703, and he was among those of the first who settled in the eastern part of Bridgeton, N. J.

[From Elmer's History of Cumberland County.]

William Dare, Jr.

William Dare, Jr., was a son of William and Constant Dare. I have not been able to find the date of his birth or death, but Elmer's History of Cumberland County says: "About 1753 William Dare, Jr., and Colonel Ephraim Seeley purchased of the agent of the West Jersey Society several hundred acres lying south of Bridges' tract and east of the tract sold to Mr. Moore."

Robert Dare

Robert Dare, the second son of William and Constant, was born in 1702 and died August 22, 1772. He was a member of the Deerfield Presbyterian Church and is buried in the graveyard of that church.

I have not been able to learn the name of his wife.

His children were Daniel Dare, Robert Dare, Jr., Benjamin Dare and David Dare. There may have been other children.

Benoni Dare, Elizabeth Dare, Constant Dare and Sarah Dare were children of William and Constant Dare, but I have not been able to get any information in regard to them.

Thomas Ewing Westcott, born April 4, 1807, and died in 1812.

William Sayre Westcott, born Aug. 26, 1809. He married Charleton Sayre, the daughter of a New Jersey farmer. He was farming near Cincinnati, Ohio, and in 1847 he moved to Illinois, near his brother Horatio, where he died in 1875.

William A. Ingersol married Annie Roberts. They have a son and daughter.

Robert C. Ingersol, Jr., married Wilhelmina Raynolds. They have a daughter.

Robert D. Cawman, the fifth child of Alexander and Mary Cawman, died in 1854, at the age of three.

A large part of the substance of this record of the descendants of Hannah Dare was obtained from her Bible, over one hundred years old, now in possession of her grand-daughter, Mrs. Capt. Ingersol, of Philadelphia, who prizes it very highly.

When the war of the Rebellion broke out Alexander Cawman was in the lumber business in North Carolina, and to avoid being pressed into the Southern army he escaped to Fort Hatteras.

Mary Westcott Cawman (his wife) and the children were carried North by the U. S. gunboat Delaware.

All the time they were in North Carolina she had an American flag hidden between the mattresses, and when the gunboat came up the river she waved the flag out of the window and claimed protection under it, and was thus enabled to escape.

Although a Northern woman she found many true friends among the Southern people, who helped her in those trying times when her husband was compelled to leave her in a hostile country.

Mary Westcott, like her mother, Hannah Dare, was ever ready to assist in practical charities in relieving the distressed.

During his life in Zanesville, he was engaged in a woolen factory with his father, in a saw-mill with Alfred Printz (his brother-in-law), and in the dry-goods business. Later at West Carlisle he had a grist-mill and woolen factory.

Frances E. Dare died Sunday at 7 p. m., Jan. 10, 1892, at her residence, 79 Perry street, Cleveland, Ohio, at the age of 83.

A large circle of friends will be grieved to learn of the death of Mrs. Frances E. Dare, widow of the late Jesse Dare, formerly of Zanesville, Ohio. Mrs. Dare was a native of Winchester, Va., in which place she was born Oct. 5, 1809.

When over fifty years of age she moved to Cleveland, where she resided until her death last Sunday. She is survived by five daughters, Mrs. E. D. Stark, Mrs. A. S. Whiting and Mrs. L. O. Rawson of this city; Mrs. C. D. Ettinger of Chicago, and Mrs. J. S. Ketcham of St. Paul, and one son, Mr. I. S. Dare, of Dover, Ohio. It is the verdict of all Mrs. Dare's friends that in her character there was a remarkable blending of energy, sweetness and gentleness. Her life was devoted in a large measure to her family.

In her declining years it was her pride that she had reared a large family to honorable manhood and womanhood. Nevertheless, she did not forget the less fortunate, for the stranger within her gates was often cheered by kindly words and charitable deeds. Mrs. Dare took great interest in current events, which, together with an unusual memory, made her a delightful companion. Through a long life she suffered much sorrow and pain, but she was sustained to the end by her steady will and trust in God. She never grew old in spirit.

Sarah J. Dare, wife of E. D. Stark, died Sunday evening, Dec. 18, 1892, at Cleveland, Ohio.

A TRIBUTE TO HER MEMORY

I feel that the death of Mrs. Stark calls for more than a passing notice. There are many to whom it will be felt as a personal loss.

The Sabbath dawn found her in usual health; its close saw her motionless in death. At midnight the messenger came, and swifter than the lightning's stroke closed the heart's pulsation and her freed spirit took its flight to that mysterious land of which it is written, There shall be no night nor death, no sorrow nor sighing, and God shall wipe away all tears.

Mrs. Stark was a woman of rare qualities of head and heart.

Peculiarly happy in disposition, none knew her but to love her, and the circle of her friends extended to every one with whom she came in contact. In all the relations of life, as wife, mother, friend, neighbor and companion, she was unexcelled.

Always courteous, kind, sympathetic, tender of others' feelings, careful to avoid offense, interested in the welfare of others, ever ready with advice and sympathy, she was in every respect a true gentlewoman. I had known her long; I saw her at the marriage altar, I saw her for the last time in the coffin and the shroud. Herself, husband and four stalwart sons show the rare instance of a household never before invaded by death. She is the first to receive the call, but it came so suddenly as to leave us dazed and crushed.

In all the relations of life—the family, the church, the social circle, the bonds of intimate friendship—she will be sadly missed and tearfully mourned.

Farewell, sweet life! Its fragrance will linger long within many a heart and its precious memory will remain like a perpetual benediction over every one within the wide circle of her acquaintances. W.

Robert Dare Moore, born May 28, 1821. He learned the iron-moulding trade, spending sixty years in the foundry, with forty-five years of almost continuous foremanship, and made a long and careful study of the many mysteries turning up in foundry experiences. When over seventy-five he retired from business, and has occupied part of his time in contributing articles to the magazines, containing some of his choicest information, largely philosophic, on foundry studies.

Robert Dare Moore had one daughter, Bella Moore, born in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1862. She was carefully reared and from a child exhibited a high order of dramatic talent.

When eighteen and a half years old she married Mr. W. G. Gregg. She was acknowledged by leading critics to be one of the most promising of young American actresses.

For six years she appeared in star roles in her own company in the different cities from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

She died of consumption, Jan. 16, 1889, aged twenty-six years, leaving a daughter six months old.

Charles Dare Moore, born June 30, 1822.

Very early in life he exhibited a roving disposition. He made several sea voyages, but soon tired of that and joined a United States expedition to survey the coast of North Carolina, and after that he joined an expedition to survey the new Territory of California.

While on their voyage around Cape Horn, in a naval ship, in 1848, the gold discovery was made and the men all rushed to the mines on their arrival.

Charles took care of instruments in a lodging-room, rented for the two purposes, for several months.

Getting tired of the idle life, he obtained leave of absence, and went to trading with the miners. When carrying goods on pack mules from the coast to their trading camp, they were compelled to bury them at night, as the Indians were such expert thieves.

Charles and his partner made money. They had wheat ranches and two mills in Scott and Yreka Valleys, north of San Francisco.

Charles died in 1855 of consumption, and during his last illness Mrs. McCormick, his partner's wife, took care of him.
